- Mines were again planted along the Latvian coast near VEMTS-PILS between August 1948 and March 1949. A large ice-breaker entered the VENTSPILS port twice during the winter of 1948/1949 and each time discharged about six hundred mines of unknown type at the cannery buildings, which had formerly been used as mine depot.
- Two torpedo boats (two stacks, two guns and six torpedo tubes each) which were stationed in TENTSPILS, repeatedly left the port, each with about 20 mines aboard. Nost of the mines were laid north of VENTSPILS, from two to five nautical miles off the coast.
- The old approach lane to the VETTSPILS port, i.e., a half-nautical-mile lane running about 144 degrees (true course), remained open, but the 60 VENTSPILS fishing boats were ordered to fish only outside a 5-nautical-mile zone off the coast. Eight police boats (30 feet long, 40-HP Diesel engine, two-man crew) have been employed to keep vessels out of the mine-infested waters since august 1948.
- Two fishing boats struck mines and sank in September 1948. A gun-boat, about two hundred feet long and armed with four or six medium caliber antiaircraft guns, was flamaged by hitting a mine and was towed into the port. The gunboat was later towed to LEPAYA. 25X1X

Comment: Although the mine fields off VENTSPILS may have been laid during the war, it is noted that police boats and naval vessels with mines aboard were observed only after August 1948.
